In the current issue, in addition to the reviewed articles which present original information in their particular fields of research, I would like to draw your attention to a new section that introduces abstracts of theses authored by graduate students at the Koret School of Veterinary Medicine, HUU. In this issue of IJVM, three abstracts on the topic of canine and feline cardiology have been published.

In addition, you can find a selection of Abstracts from the 32nd Annual Symposium of Veterinary Medicine in Israel, chaired by Prof. Kalman Perk, the honorary director of the Koret School of Veterinary Medicine. These abstracts reflect the wide variety and high quality of the research performed in the field of veterinary medicine in Israel.

I hope you will find the contents of the current issue enlightening, didactic and enjoyable.
